the Democrats shouted "Of course; of course!" and greeted the remark with cries of derision.

"Sir," Mr. Cockran said with great earnestness, "the man who makes that confession cannot interrupt me hore again, or come voluntarily within the rarge of my vision." Again the Democrats broke forth in long and loud applianse.

Dalzell Subsides.

This concluded the colloquy. Mr. Dalzell remained in his seat for a moment and then retired to the Republican cload room. He made no attempt to reply and Mr. Cockran resumed his argument against protection.

When the commission bill was taken up Mr. Hepburn (Rep., Iowa) was recognized. He immediately began to pay his respects to a previous speech by Mr. Kitchin, in which the President and Mr. Grosvenor had been attacked. He declared that "the denuciation of the Chief Executive of the greatest nation in the world was bitter and even criminal." The speech of the North Carolina member, he declared, was aimed to destroy the power of the United States among the world powers of the earth, and he said that the quotation from President Roosevelt's book that there was "a strain of barbarism in the people of the South," carried with it its own justification when applied to Mr. Kitchin's speech. up Mr. Hepburn (Rep., Iowa) was rec years young," and is vastly interested in the building of the Revolutionary In the building of the Revolutionary memorial.

The organization last night closed a congress, which, it might truly be said, has accomplished less than any of its prodecessors. Several important events took place during the congress, notably the laying of the corner stone of the proposed Continental Hall. In the sessions of the society, however, little work was accomplished.

Three days in the early part of the week were whiled away killing proposed amendments to the constitution, and though much debate was brought into the congress on these amendments, it was but a repetition of the program of previous congresses, and gained nothing materially for the society.

In the election of vice presidents general, which took three sessions of the congress to accomplish, much light was thrown on the political situation and the effect these elections promise to have next year when a new president general is up for election.

Politics of Congress.

Politics of Congress.

Nine vice presidents general were elected, but the tenth place was a tie between two representatives of opposing factions in the society. These were Mrs. Lattle, of New York, and Mrs. Quarles, Quarles was the choice of the Fairbanks faction, and Mrs. Denald Mc-Lean, of New York, who has her eye on the office of president general, rallied her forces to the support of Mrs. Quaries in order that Mrs. Little, a supporter of Mrs. Daniel Manning, who is a possible candidate also, may not become too prominent in New York and as dim the luster of Mrs. McLean's ir-fluence throughout the State. Mrs. Quaries was elected by a majority of five, and a signal victory is counted unto itself by the Fairbanks faction. Fairbanks faction, and Mrs. Denald Mc

Bits of oratory were also contributed by Secretary Taft, Attorney General Knox, William Miller Collier, solicitor of the Department of Commerce and Labor; President Charles W. Needham, of Columbian University; Dr. A. F. King, Bayard Wyman, Hugh M. Caldwell, and John B. Goff.

His Eligibility.

Mr. Cortelyou is eligible to membership in the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity by reason of his having graduated from the Columbian University Law School in the class of 1896. The local chapter was not then in existence, not having been organized until October 7, 1899.

The fraternity was founded March, 1873, at the Massachusetts State College, at Amherst. It has grown steadily since then, and now has nineteen different chapters among the Eastern colleges and universities.
